Executive summary

This is your starting point. We checked the available public information on 28 July 2026 to give you a clear picture of where Example Restaurant stands alongside six nearby restaurants.

Three takeaways:

- You're visible on Uber Eats, but not found on Deliveroo or Just Eat. Five of the six nearby restaurants we looked at are also on Uber Eats only. One business — Ephesus Restaurant — appears on both Deliveroo and Uber Eats, with a £20 minimum order on Deliveroo and a £2.50 delivery fee on Uber Eats. It's worth checking whether customers have asked about ordering through other platforms, and whether the fees and minimums you see elsewhere make sense for your business.
- Your Google rating of 4.7 from 297 reviews sits in the middle of the local range. Persian Flame Restaurant has the highest rating at 4.9, while West Park Lounge has the lowest at 4.5. Ephesus Restaurant has gathered 970 reviews — the most in this group — while go! Thai bistro has 26. Review count is a visible public signal, but this report cannot show how it affects your ranking or orders.
- Most nearby restaurants share a similar cuisine profile to yours. All six offer alcohol, and five mention vegetarian or vegan options. This means customers searching locally will see several similar choices. What sets you apart will depend on your menu, service, pricing and the experience customers talk about in their feedback.

Where you stand locally

Example Restaurant is a restaurant at Leeds area, United Kingdom

LEEDS We checked your delivery-relevant public presence — the information customers can see when they're looking for somewhere to order from.

Google presence: You have a 4.7 rating from 297 reviews. Your Google listing shows opening hours seven days a week, a phone number and a website.

Delivery platforms: We found a listing on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat in the information checked for this report.

Nearby restaurants: The six businesses we looked at are all within 2.3 miles. Five are on Uber Eats only. One — Ephesus Restaurant, about a mile away — is on both Deliveroo and Uber Eats. Most share overlapping cuisine details: alcohol, vegetarian options, small plates and wine appear frequently.

What we don't know: We don't have platform ratings, review counts, delivery fees or minimum orders for your Uber Eats listing. We also don't have detailed promotional or menu information for any of the businesses in this comparison.

Local competitor scorecard

The table below shows the six nearby restaurants we looked at. It gives you a quick view of Google ratings, review counts and which delivery platforms we found them on.

Business	Distance	Google rating	Google reviews	Deliveroo	Just Eat	Uber Eats
Example Restaurant	—	4.7	297	—	—	✓
Persian Flame Restaurant	0.14 mi	4.9	124	—	—	✓
Ephesus Restaurant	0.96 mi	4.7	970	✓	—	✓
West Park Lounge	2.24 mi	4.5	582	—	—	—
Bavette	0.32 mi	4.8	336	—	—	✓
Forde	0.33 mi	4.6	230	—	—	✓
go! Thai bistro	0.30 mi	4.8	26	—	—	✓

How to read this: A tick means we found a listing on that platform. A dash means no listing was seen in the information checked. The Google rating and review count come from each business's Google listing.

Patterns worth noting:

- Uber Eats is the most common platform in this group. Five of the six nearby restaurants appear there, as do you.
- Ephesus Restaurant is the only business we found on Deliveroo.
- No business in this comparison was found on Just Eat.
- Google ratings range from 4.5 to 4.9. Review counts vary widely, from 26 to 970.

The nearby businesses worth watching

Persian Flame Restaurant — 0.14 miles away

Persian Flame is the closest business in this comparison. It has a 4.9 Google rating from 124 reviews — the highest rating in this group. The cuisine listed includes alcohol, beer, small plates, vegetarian options and wine, which overlaps with your own.

We found a listing on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat.

This business is worth watching because it's very close and has a strong public rating. It's also useful to compare your own Google review count and rating with a nearby business that customers may see when they search locally. Check your recent feedback to see what customers are saying about you, and whether there are any repeated themes you can address.

Ephesus Restaurant — 0.96 miles away

Ephesus Restaurant has a 4.7 Google rating from 970 reviews — by far the highest review count in this comparison. The cuisine includes alcohol, beer, cocktails, halal food, healthy options, late-night food, small plates, vegetarian options and wine.

We found listings on both Deliveroo and Uber Eats. On Deliveroo, the listing shows a 4.6 rating from 15 reviews, a £20 minimum order and a promotion for new users (minimum spend £10, fees apply). On Uber Eats, the listing shows a 4.9 rating from 77 reviews and a £2.50 delivery fee.

Ephesus is the only business in this group we found on Deliveroo. The £20 minimum order is a specific detail you may want to note if you're considering whether Deliveroo makes sense for your business. The large Google review count suggests this business has been visible to local customers for some time, but we can't tell from public listings how that translates into actual orders or sales.

West Park Lounge — 2.24 miles away

West Park Lounge has a 4.5 Google rating from 582 reviews. The cuisine is very similar to yours: alcohol, beer, cocktails, coffee, healthy options, quick bite, small plates, vegetarian options, vegan options and wine.

No listing was seen on Deliveroo, Just Eat or Uber Eats in the information checked.

This business is the furthest away in this comparison and was not found on any delivery platform. It's included because of the strong Google review base and the overlapping cuisine profile. If you're thinking about how customers choose between similar local restaurants, West Park Lounge is a useful reference point — but we can't say anything about its delivery strategy or performance from the information available.

Bavette — 0.32 miles away

Bavette has a 4.8 Google rating from 336 reviews. The cuisine includes alcohol, beer, cocktails, coffee, vegan options, vegetarian options and wine.

We found a listing on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat.

Bavette is close by and shares several cuisine signals with your business. The Google review count of 336 is higher than yours, and the 4.8 rating is slightly higher too. It's worth checking your own recent feedback to see how customers describe your food and service, and whether there are any quick improvements you can make.

Forde — 0.33 miles away

Forde has a 4.6 Google rating from 230 reviews. The cuisine is almost identical to yours: alcohol, beer, cocktails, coffee, healthy options, small plates, vegan options, vegetarian options and wine.

We found a listing on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat.

Forde is very close and offers a similar range of options. The Google rating and review count are both slightly lower than yours. This is a useful nearby comparison, especially if you want to understand how your public presence compares with a business that customers may see in the same local search.

go! Thai bistro — 0.30 miles away go! Thai bistro has a 4.8 Google rating from 26 reviews. The cuisine includes alcohol, beer, quick bite, vegan options, vegetarian options and wine.

We found a listing on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat.

This business has the smallest review count in this comparison. The 4.8 rating is strong, but the low review count means we can't draw firm conclusions about how long it's been visible or how many customers have left feedback. It's included because it's close by and appears on Uber Eats, like you.

Shared data gaps

We don't have platform ratings, review counts, delivery fees, minimum orders or promotional details for most of the Uber Eats listings in this comparison. We also don't have detailed menu or pricing information for any business. These gaps are noted in the "What we couldn't confirm" section later in this report.

Your starting point

This is your first report, so there's no earlier comparison to measure against. What you're seeing here is a snapshot of your delivery-relevant public presence on 28 July 2026, alongside six nearby restaurants.

What this report gives you:

- Your Google rating and review count as they appeared on that date.
- Which delivery platforms we found you on.
- The same information for six nearby businesses.
- A clear picture of where you stand locally right now.

What happens next time:

When we check again, we'll compare the same public fields — your Google rating, review count and platform presence — with the figures in this report. We'll also check whether the nearby businesses have changed in any supported way.

We can't promise that exactly the same competitor set will always be selected. The businesses included depend on distance, category, review base and platform presence at the time we check. If a business moves, closes, changes category or drops below the selection threshold, it may not appear in the next report.

What this report can't show:

We can't measure the impact of any action you take between now and the next report. If your Google rating or review count changes, we can note the change — but we can't prove what caused it. Your own internal order figures, customer feedback and sales data are the only way to judge whether a change in your public presence has made a commercial difference.

Three things that matter

1. You're on Uber Eats, but not found on Deliveroo or Just Eat

What we found:

We found a listing for Example Restaurant on Uber Eats. No listing was seen on Deliveroo or Just Eat in the information checked for this report.

Five of the six nearby restaurants are also on Uber Eats only. Ephesus Restaurant — about a mile away — is the only business in this comparison we found on both Deliveroo and Uber Eats.

Why it may be worth attention:

Customers searching only on Deliveroo or Just Eat may not see your business there. Whether that matters depends on how many of your potential customers use those platforms, and whether the fees, minimum orders and commission rates make sense for your business.

Ephesus Restaurant's Deliveroo listing shows a £20 minimum order and a £2.50 delivery fee on Uber Eats. These are specific details you can compare with your own costs and typical order values.

What to check:

- Log in to your Uber Eats account and check your current delivery fee, minimum order and any promotions.
- Ask a few recent customers how they found you and which platform they prefer.
- If you're considering Deliveroo or Just Eat, contact them directly to find out the commission rate, minimum order requirements and setup process.
- Check your own order data to see what percentage of your delivery orders come through Uber Eats, and what your average order value is.

What to consider doing next:

If customers have asked about ordering through Deliveroo or Just Eat, and your average order value is high enough to cover the fees, it may be worth exploring those platforms. If most of your delivery customers already use Uber Eats, and you're not hearing requests for other platforms, you may decide to focus your effort elsewhere.

Before making a final decision, you need to know your own commission rate, average order value, delivery costs and how many orders you can handle during busy periods.

2. Your Google review count sits in the middle of the local range

What we found:

You have 297 Google reviews. Ephesus Restaurant has 970, Bavette has 336, Forde has 230, Persian Flame Restaurant has 124 and go! Thai bistro has 26.

Your 4.7 rating is the same as Ephesus Restaurant's. Persian Flame Restaurant has the highest rating at 4.9, and West Park Lounge has the lowest at 4.5.

Why it may be worth attention:

Review count is a visible public signal. Customers searching locally will see your rating and review count alongside nearby businesses. A higher review count may make your listing more noticeable, but this report cannot show how it affects your Google ranking or the number of orders you receive.

What to check:

- Read your most recent Google reviews and note any repeated comments — positive or negative.
- Check whether you're already asking customers to leave a review, and if so, how often.
- Look at your own order data to see whether there's any pattern between your Google rating and the number of orders you receive.

What to consider doing next:

If you're not already encouraging satisfied customers to leave a review, you could start doing so in a simple, natural way — for example, by mentioning it on your receipt or in a follow-up message. If you are already asking, check whether the process is easy and whether customers are responding.

Responding to reviews — especially negative ones — is also worth considering. It shows potential customers that you take feedback seriously.

Before making a final decision, you need to know how many customers you serve each week, how many of them are likely to leave a review, and whether you have the time to respond to feedback regularly.

3. Most nearby restaurants share a similar cuisine profile

What we found:

All six nearby restaurants mention alcohol in their cuisine details. Five mention vegetarian or vegan options. Several mention small plates, wine, cocktails and coffee.

Your own cuisine listing includes alcohol, beer, cocktails, coffee, healthy options, quick bite, small plates, vegan options, vegetarian options and wine.

Why it may be worth attention:

When customers search locally, they'll see several businesses offering similar options. What makes them choose one over another will depend on factors this report can't measure: your menu, pricing, service, delivery speed, portion size and the experience customers talk about in their reviews.

What to check:

- Read your recent Google reviews and note what customers say about your food, service and value.
- Compare your menu and pricing with a nearby business you know well.
- Ask a few regular customers what they think makes your business different.

What to consider doing next:

If your reviews mention something customers particularly like — a specific dish, friendly service, generous portions — you could make that more visible in your Uber Eats listing or on your website. If there's a repeated complaint, it's worth addressing it before you focus on attracting more customers.

Before making a final decision, you need to know what your regular customers value most, what your profit margin is on popular dishes, and whether you have the capacity to handle more orders during busy periods.

Your 30-day action plan

Here are three practical priorities for the next month. Each one is based on something we found in this report, and each one gives you a clear set of steps you can work through.

Priority 1: Check your Uber Eats listing and compare it with a nearby businessA. Why this is on the list

We found a listing for you on Uber Eats, but we don't have your platform rating, review count, delivery fee, minimum order or promotional details. Ephesus Restaurant — the only business in this comparison we found on Deliveroo — has a £20 minimum order on that platform and a £2.50 delivery fee on Uber Eats.

Checking your own Uber Eats listing will tell you what customers see when they search, and comparing it with a nearby business will help you understand whether your fees and minimum order are in line with local expectations.

B. What to check

- Your Uber Eats account: log in and note your current delivery fee, minimum order, rating, review count and any active promotions.
- Your recent Uber Eats orders: check your average order value and how many orders you receive during a typical week.
- Ephesus Restaurant's Uber Eats listing: visit it as a customer would and note the delivery fee, minimum order and any promotions you see.

C. Steps for this month

1. Log in to your Uber Eats account and write down your current delivery fee, minimum order, rating and review count.
2. Check your order history for a recent period that is meaningful for your business — for example, the last four weeks — and calculate your average order value.
3. Visit Ephesus Restaurant's Uber Eats listing (the URL is in this report) and note their delivery fee and minimum order.
4. Compare your figures with theirs. If your delivery fee is significantly higher or your minimum order is significantly lower, consider whether that makes sense for your business.

5. If you're not sure, ask a few recent customers whether they found your delivery fee reasonable.

D. What "done" looks like

You've logged in to your Uber Eats account, noted your current settings, calculated your average order value, compared your fees and minimum order with Ephesus Restaurant's, and decided whether any change is needed.

E. What we'll look at next time

We can check your Uber Eats listing again in the next report. If we're able to capture your platform rating, review count, delivery fee and minimum order, we'll compare them with the figures you've recorded this month.

F. Before making a final decision

You need to know your commission rate, your average order value, your delivery costs and how many orders you can handle during busy periods. If you're considering changing your delivery fee or minimum order, check the impact on your profit margin first.

Priority 2: Read your recent Google reviews and respond where useful

A. Why this is on the list

You have 297 Google reviews and a 4.7 rating. Review count is a visible public signal, and responding to reviews — especially negative ones — shows potential customers that you take feedback seriously.

Reading your recent reviews will tell you what customers are saying about your food, service and value. Responding to them is a simple way to show that you're listening.

B. What to check

- Your Google Business Profile: read the most recent reviews and note any repeated comments.
- Your response rate: check how many of your recent reviews you've already replied to.
- Your competitors' reviews: read a few recent reviews for Ephesus Restaurant, Bavette or Forde to see what customers say about them.

C. Steps for this month

1. Log in to your Google Business Profile and read the reviews from a recent period that is meaningful for your business.
2. Note any repeated positive comments (for example, "great service", "generous portions", "quick delivery") and any repeated complaints.
3. Respond to any recent negative reviews that you haven't already replied to. Keep your response polite, brief and focused on what you'll do to improve.
4. Respond to a few positive reviews as well, to show that you appreciate the feedback.
5. If you see a repeated complaint, check whether it's something you can address quickly.

D. What "done" looks like

You've read your recent Google reviews, noted any repeated themes, responded to at least a few reviews (both positive and negative), and decided whether any repeated complaint needs immediate attention.

E. What we'll look at next time

We can check your Google review count and rating again in the next report. If they've changed, we'll note the difference. We can't prove that responding to reviews caused the change, but you'll be able to compare the figures with your own records.

F. Before making a final decision

You need to know how many customers you serve each week, how many of them are likely to leave a review, and whether you have the time to respond to feedback regularly. If responding to reviews feels overwhelming, start with just the most recent negative ones.

Priority 3: Decide whether Deliveroo or Just Eat is worth exploring

A. Why this is on the list

We didn't find a listing for you on Deliveroo or Just Eat. Ephesus Restaurant is the only business in this comparison we found on Deliveroo, with a £20 minimum order.

Whether joining another platform makes sense depends on how many of your potential customers use it, what the commission rate is, and whether your average order value is high enough to cover the fees.

B. What to check

- Customer feedback: ask a few recent customers whether they've looked for you on Deliveroo or Just Eat.
- Your own order data: check your average order value and how many delivery orders you receive during a typical week.
- Platform requirements: contact Deliveroo and Just Eat directly to find out their commission rates, minimum order requirements and setup process.

C. Steps for this month

1. Ask a few recent delivery customers how they found you and whether they use Deliveroo or Just Eat.
2. Check your order history for a recent period that is meaningful for your business and calculate your average order value.
3. Contact Deliveroo and Just Eat (or visit their websites) to find out the commission rate, minimum order requirements and setup process.
4. Compare the commission rate with your current Uber Eats rate, and check whether your average order value is high enough to make the platform worthwhile.
5. If the numbers make sense and customers have asked about it, consider setting up a trial listing.

D. What "done" looks like

You've asked customers whether they use Deliveroo or Just Eat, calculated your average order value, contacted both platforms to find out their requirements, and decided whether joining one or both of them makes commercial sense for your business.

E. What we'll look at next time

We can check Deliveroo and Just Eat again in the next report. If we find a listing for you, we'll note it. If we don't, we'll continue to note that no listing was seen.

F. Before making a final decision

You need to know your commission rate, your average order value, your delivery costs, your profit margin and how many orders you can handle during busy periods. If you're already at capacity during busy times, joining another platform may not help.

Owner's monthly checklist

Here's a practical checklist based on this report. You can print it, keep it beside your desk and work through it during the month.

- ☐ Log in to your Uber Eats account and note your current delivery fee, minimum order, rating and review count.
- ☐ Calculate your average order value for a recent period that is meaningful for your business.
- ☐ Visit Ephesus Restaurant's Uber Eats listing and note their delivery fee and minimum order.
- ☐ Compare your Uber Eats settings with Ephesus Restaurant's and decide whether any change is needed.
- ☐ Read your most recent Google reviews and note any repeated positive comments or complaints.
- ☐ Respond to at least a few recent Google reviews — both positive and negative.
- ☐ Ask a few recent delivery customers how they found you and which platform they prefer.
- ☐ Contact Deliveroo and Just Eat to find out their commission rates and minimum order requirements.
- ☐ Decide whether joining Deliveroo or Just Eat makes commercial sense for your business.
- ☐ Record any change you make to your delivery settings, pricing or platform presence before the next report.

What we couldn't confirm

We don't have platform ratings, review counts, delivery fees, minimum orders or promotional details for most of the Uber Eats listings in this comparison — including yours. We also don't have detailed menu or pricing information for any business.

Some public delivery listings could not be confirmed from the information available for this report. Where a listing was not found, it means we didn't see it in the information checked on 28 July 2026 — it does not prove that the listing does not exist.

What we'll check next time

Here's what we can track in the next comparable report:

What we'll check	Today's value	Why it matters
Your Google rating	4.7	A change may indicate how recent customer feedback is affecting your public rating.
Your Google review count	297	An increase shows that more customers are leaving feedback.
Your Uber Eats presence	Listing found	We'll check whether the listing is still visible.
Your Deliveroo presence	No listing seen	We'll check whether a listing appears.
Your Just Eat presence	No listing seen	We'll check whether a listing appears.
Ephesus Restaurant's Google rating	4.7	A change in a nearby business's rating may be worth noting.
Ephesus Restaurant's Google review count	970	A significant increase may indicate strong recent customer engagement.
Persian Flame Restaurant's Google rating	4.9	The highest rating in this comparison; worth tracking.
Bavette's Google review count	336	A nearby business with a similar cuisine profile; useful for comparison.

What to record internally:

- Any change you make to your Uber Eats delivery fee, minimum order or promotions.
- Any change you make to your menu, pricing or opening hours.
- The number of delivery orders you receive during a typical week.
- Any customer feedback about delivery platforms, fees or service.

We can't promise that unavailable information will become available in the next report. We also can't prove that a change in your public presence was caused by an action you took — your own internal figures are needed to judge commercial results.
